HIGH BLANTERE.

Over 200 Lives Lost in the Torrible Mining Disaster in the Glasgow Coal Re-

[From the London Telegraph.] ished can only be approximately determined. This morning, about 6 o'clock, the men employed at Messrs. Dixon's collieries, High Blantyre, departed to their usual work, 126 men descending the shaft of the the shaft of the pit known as No. 2, while 107 entered pit No. 3. Statutory communication exists between these pits, and it seems that before the disaster occurred a number of men were engaged removing stoops in the splint of the lower seam of No. 2 pit. This op-eration is always regarded as hazardous, and it appears that, with culpable and almost inexplicable recklessness, the hands employed made use of naked lamps. While the men were ension of fire-damp occurred, which spent itself in the shaft of No. 3 pit. The explosion was attended by a sound resembling the loudest thunder, flames burst forth at the head of shaft No. 3, and dense volumes of smoke rolled up from the entrance to pit No. 2. Fragments of coal and timber and clouds of dust were then scattered around the heads of the shafts, large quantities of debris being shot for a great height into the air.

The deafening sound of the explosion immediately attracted a large crowd to the scene of the calamity, and with all possible celerity relief gangs were or-ganized, and every effort was made to restore ventilation to the mines. An hour, however, elapsed before air could again be admitted to the pits, and all efforts to descend the shaft of No. 3 was found to be impracticable. Four men then strove to enter No. 2 pit, but were unable to proceed along the splint seam from the damp, and, after persevering at the imminent risk of their lives, were brought up in a fainting condition to the surface, one of them, named Thomas Laidlaw. being, it is feared, very seriously injured. Notwithstanding this, however, another relief gang was immediately formed, and the new party of volunteers, after advancing a short way from the foot of the shaft, found the bodies of six men, dreadfully charred and disfigured, which were at once drawn up to the bank. Although a constant stream of water was poured down the shaft that the reserve party might be in a measure relieved from the noxious effects of the damp, the new relief gang were finally forced to desist from their perilous mission, and so seriously were several of and children of the men who were in the pits exhibiting heartrending emotion. Very faint hopes are entertained that any of the men in the pits have escaped, and that it is feared that all of the 233 men who descended the shafts in the morning must have perished. The terror and agony exhibited among the wives and children of the imprisoned miners were of the most heartrending character. Efforts were made to restore communications with those below, and at length these were so far successful that one man was brought up alive to the surface. This survivor, who escaped from No. 2 pit, stated that he was working at the face when he heard an explosion. Not, however, suspecting anything unusual he made his way leisurely to the bottom, when the sight of dead bodies all around opened his eyes to the appalling extent of the catastrophe. Every effort was made to restore the ventilation which the explosion had stagnated, but more than an hour elapsed before a current of air would flow as it should do from No. 3 pit to No. 2.

Six several times the reserves returned at great risk to themselves, and on each eventually became so bad that they were forced to desist.

The most heartrending scenes were witnessed in the neighborhood of both notice,—Loyansport (Ind.) Pharos. pits and along the row of houses situated 100 yards from No. 2 pit, for it was near these buildings that the dead bodies recovered from the pit were conveyed, There were women with children in their from the exploring parties. As one joiners' shed, there was a rush of the relatives of the men, and an eager scanand exclaiming that they would never see their fathers or brothers more. Lit-

In passing through a train on the New York Central railroad to collect tickets, the conductor encountered, east of Utica, a colored man who had neither ticket nor medium of exchange, and, after a Wife of the General of the United States Army, desultory discussion, stopped the cars and kicked him off the platform. Right here the conductor bounded from his chair and danced The little colliery village of High Blantyre, near Hamilton, recently was the scene of a most terrible colliery disaster. How to Cook and Serve the Canvas-Back.

Upon the table, the canvas-back makes a royal dish, though few can distinguish between it and the red-head when both are in season. Only those very familiar with the birds can tell which is which when alive, and, when served, it becomes almost an impossibility. The celery flavor is more marked in the canvas-back in the best of the sea-son. It is seldom served precisely as it should be anywhere out of Maryland. If allowed to remain in the oven five minutes too long, it is unfit for the tanaked lamps. While the men were engaged in blasting in the splint of No. 2 pit, about 9 o'clock, an appalling explosion of fire-damp occurred, which spent size of fire-damp occurred, which spent a full-sized duck in twenty-two minutes. It should never remain in over twentyfive. After a duck is picked and drawn, it should be simply wiped dry. Water should never touch it, and it should be fairly seasoned before going to the fire. When done, the birds should be placed in pairs in hot, dry dishes. There is no need to prepare a gravy; immediately they are cut, they will fill the dish with the richest gravy that ever was tasted. One canvas-back to each "cover," is considered a fair allowance at a Maryland table, but, when the bird is only an incident of the dinner or supper, of course half a bird is sufficient for each person. Slicing the bird is unheard of. The two-pronged fork is inserted diagonally astride the breastbone, and the knife lays half of the bird on each side, leaving the "carcass" on the fork be-tween. The triangle of meat an inch thick comprised between the leg and the wing, with its apex at the back and its base at the breast, is considered the most delicious morsel of meat that exmost delicious morsel of income and is gists. An Experiment for Boys.

Take two empty oyster cans and a stout, smooth string. Let a small hole be made in the bottom of each can, through which the string, say fifty or 100 feet in length, is passed and secured. Then let the experimenters set up their talking telegraph by choosing their stations as far apart as the tightly-stretched string will permit, and while one of the operators holds his ear to one of the cans them affected by the deadly atmosphere and his companion his mouth to the can which they had been inhaling that they of the other end of the line, they will had, on returning to the surface, to be find that a conversation can be carried covered with earth to free them from the on, so that low tones, and even a whisper, influence of the choke-damp. Fresh bands of volunteers at once took up the task of exploring the workings, and several other bodies, mostly mutilated be- the sound of the voice does not seem to yond recognition, were recovered. The black cloud of smoke which at first floated over the scene of the catastrophe from the can itself, which is held to the cleared away, and as the news of the disaster spread like wildfire through the pears to be a deception, but it is really surrounding districts a vast concourse and so. The ear tells the exact truth.

The voice that is heard really comes from the can that is held to the car of hearer. The voice of the speaker communicates sound-producing vibrations to the walls of the can with which his voice the choke-damp was at first so strong is in immediate contact. These vibrations are communicated to the string, but so changed that they no longer affect the ear. A person may stand by the string while the sound is passing, and yet hear nothing. At the other end of the string, however, these hidden vibrations reproduce themselves as sound.

A Message to a Runaway Boy.

On the 11th of last August Edwin Rock Taber, a lad fourteen years of age, five feet high, square built, large blue eyes, freekled face, uneven teeth, and of polite and manly bearing, left his father's home in this city. He was afterward seen at Lafayette, Ind., but before his father could reach these he had fore his father could reach there he had taken his departure. Paul Taber, Esq., the father of the boy, is a worthy and highly-respected citizen of this city. While he and his excellent wife were mourning over the boy who had cause-lessly strayed from his comfortable home, a still greater affliction was visited upon them. In one week four of their remaining children died of diphtheria, three of whom were buried in he would return at once to his home, and it is in that hope that we respectfully ask our exchanges to copy this

The Influence of Malaria Counteracted. That the harmful influence upon the human system of malaria may be effectually counterscted has been demonstrated for years past by the protection afforded the inhabitants of vast miasma-breeding districts in North and South America, Gautema's, Mexico and the West Indies, by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Used as a preventive, they have invariably been found to be a most reliable afeguard against chills and fever, bilious remittents, and still more malignant types of malarious disease, and when employed as a runedy have always proved their adequacy to the task of eradicating such maladies from the system. For disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels, which in hot climates and mia-matic localities are particularly rife, the Bitters are a prompt and thorough remedy. They also strengthen the system, tranquilize the nerves, promote digestion and sound sleep, and impart unwonted relish for food. That the harmful influence upon the hu
